Commercial Reality Mentored Launch Spring 2011

A series of sessions will be offered for qualifying start-up companies ready to launch their venture. The formal program will cover: strategic business planning; managing and protecting intellectual property; marketing and sales; operations, management and staffing; and financial plans. The sessions cumulate in a formal presentation by the start-up company that can be used as an investor presentation. Start-up companies participating in the program have access to the business incubator services, shared office space and individual, mentoring sessions. There is a fee for participation. Please contact us about how to qualify and the start date of the sessions.

AzCI's interventionist model ensures that companies receive practical, hands-on assistance early in the innovation process - beginning in the research phase, and continuing through product development to commercialization. This structured approach helps companies to bridge the many gaps between discovery and commercialization - dramatically increasing the likelihood of success.

AzCI is a specialized business incubator, designed to meet the dynamic needs of developing technology companies. The University of Arizona is committed to transferring the ideas of its researchers and students out of its laboratories and classrooms into the market. Focusing particularly on core technologies developed at the University of Arizona, the Center promotes the growth of start-up and emerging companies.
