Overall Strategic Direction

AZPM will achieve its mission through focused efforts in five key areas:

- Audience Development
- Community Engagement
- Financial Sustainability
- Organizational Advancement
- Technology & Innovation
Audience Development
While the success of public media stations can be calculated in many ways, viewer and listener consumption is the most measurable and arguably the most important. PBS 6 is among the most-watched public television stations (per capita) in the country and NPR 89.1 is one of the top-performing stations in Southern Arizona. Moreover, viewer and listener support flows directly, albeit imprecisely, from audience size. Competition for listeners and viewers is intense in Southern Arizona and has become more so for viewers as historical cable and satellite customers "cut the cord" in favor of streaming services, providing their own mix of programs. Competition will further be heightened by the arrival of NextGen TV and the multitude of choices it will provide in the coming years. Historically, public media was the only alternative to traditional commercial media but is now only one among many alternative program choices. Further, the demographics of Southern Arizona are changing, and audiences are increasingly composed of viewers and listeners whose demographic characteristics differ from those of traditional public media consumers. AZPM has demonstrated the positive impact a successful and consistent original content production lineup can have, both in terms of industry prestige and revenue.

Therefore, the need for program diversification is equally evident, as reliance on a single production, or series, poses an inherent threat to the organization. While the development of new production projects requires substantial investments of time and resources and considerable risk, the potential benefits of service to the community and revenue are numerous. Original production projects increase the potential for future projects, enhance our competitive position in the market, create opportunities for new revenue, and facilitate the development of staff and resources available to AZPM in the future.

1. Maintain and Increase Television Audiences
2. Maintain and Increase Radio Audiences

Community Engagement
AZPM brings diverse people and ideas together to create meaningful conversations, collaborations, and connections that help build a stronger, more educated, and informed community. As a viewer and listener supported media entity, audience engagement is at the core of AZPM’s existence. Engagement is more than community events; it takes place across the organization. It is a function of the local journalism that reflects Southern Arizona, activities that promote community dialogue, resources that connect people to ideas, and partnerships that enrich the region.

Because AZPM offers content that crosses all demographics, outreach and engagement efforts will continuously connect with diverse communities. AZPM will use community engagement to understand the nuances and details of what serves the needs and interests of the diverse communities of Southern Arizona. AZPM’s management and journalists use this knowledge to better serve the public and produce meaningful community services that have measurable impact and through our journalism, helps people to make informed decisions.

Financial Sustainability

Throughout its existence, Arizona Public Media (AZPM) and its precursors have operated with the highest degree of fiscal responsibility, ever cognizant of the fiduciary responsibility it holds as a public trust to balance the budget. However, public media operations are often subjected to economic forces which exceed national inflation averages, particularly in the areas of programming and equipment costs. Due to the multitude of cable, satellite, and streaming services now available, competition for programming and talent has increased. AZPM carefully monitors operating costs while consistently providing the highest quality news, public affairs, entertainment, and educational programming and services to audiences in Southern Arizona and beyond.

Central to AZPM’s strategic plan is the ability to generate sustainable revenue sufficient to meet its operational and strategic financial goals. Beyond operating legacy media outlets and investing in emerging distribution technologies, AZPM is the producer of original local content of critical importance to the communities it serves. Benefiting from the generosity of contributors and multiple funding sources, AZPM's objective is to generate revenue which will allow it to maintain the highest level of local service while expanding its original production capacity. To support these activities, current revenue sources must be maintained and enhanced, and new, sustainable revenue opportunities must be identified and developed.

2. Major Gifts Revenue and Planned Estate Gifts Commitments

Technology & Innovation

Arizona Public Media (AZPM) will work to maintain and expand, where possible, radio and television broadcast delivery. The organization will embrace local program production standards consistent with the high level of PBS and NPR national content currently broadcast. It is AZPM’s objective to maintain a leadership position in the PBS and NPR ecosystems, utilizing new technologies to enhance and deepen service to the community and advance the goal of competing both locally and nationally in the areas of original local production and community service. Significant efforts and investment will take place during the term of this strategic plan, one of which is to relocate AZPM from its current location in the basement and sub-basement of the Modern Languages Building on the campus of the University of Arizona to a new future-focused facility. The new facility will be designed specifically to support AZPM’s future broadcast operations, emerging distribution technologies, and, of course, the University of Arizona’s land grant community service objectives.
